Ever since Google brought its first home-grown smartphones, we have been hearing of various similar devices being introduced by other mobile phone manufacturers. However, it looks like another Taiwanese company is following Google's footsteps to enter the world of mobile phones. Jumper, as its name suggests, is also a smartphone manufacturer, and will be introducing its own premium-priced handset in the coming months. While this phone will be available in the United States, you may have to wait for its release outside the country. So far, the company has released a teaser video of what it says is the Jumper E1. The video shows the device from all angles, and also includes various teasers, including that it will be launched in the coming weeks and will be priced at $600. The video does not show much more than the device. So, we are yet to find out more about the phone's hardware and software, such as its display resolution, RAM, storage, and other specifications. While there has been no official announcement on the company's Facebook page or Twitter account, the E1 looks similar to the Moto G in many ways, including that it comes with a 5-inch 1080p display and a 13-megapixel camera. However, the design looks more premium than the Moto G's, although the latter has a metal frame around its chassis, unlike the Jumper E1, which seems to be made of plastic. This isn't the first time Jumper has released a teaser video; we have already seen one of its earlier phones. This is the Jumper E0. It was launched in 2015 and was priced at $350. The handset came with a 1.5GHz Quad-Core Qualcomm Snapdragon 200 processor, a 5-inch display with a resolution of 800x480 pixels, 1GB of RAM, and 8GB of storage. The video below is from Jumper's announcement of the E0, as it showed the device from all angles and introduced it with various teasers. One of the ways to get through a tiresome and stressful day at the office is to take a moment to recharge one's batteries by looking at the photo of someone dear to them. This way, they can find it in themselves to strain a little more and finish their tasks by the end of the day. However, if you are not a huge fan of old-school photos, i.e. the ones printed on
